VOTE: COMMUNITY & VOLUNTARY SECTOR

1. SECTOR OVERVIEW: COMMUNITY & VOLUNTARY SECTOR

More than one million New Zealanders undertake some form of voluntary work in their communities. Over $1.3 billion of taxpayer and other funds is invested annually in the services provided by community sector organisations. There are approximately 23,000 incorporated societies and 10,000 charitable trusts operating in New Zealand.

The Community and Voluntary Sector Portfolio was established in 1999 to develop an improved relationship with the Voluntary Sector. The portfolio also provides an opportunity to co-ordinate government's interventions and strategies at a community level.

The areas delivered by the Department of Internal Affairs through its Community Development Group are:

- Community Policy Advice - advice with a community development perspective
- Grants Administration - services to the Lottery Grants Board and administration of other community-oriented grants schemes and two Crown Trusts
- Community Advisory Services - development assistance and information services to the community sector.

A "virtual community portfolio" has been formed through collaboration between the Community Development Group of the Department of Internal Affairs; the Community Employment Group of the Department of Labour; Child, Youth and Family; and the Ministry of Social Development.

2. STRATEGIC AND LEGISLATIVE FRAMEWORK: COMMUNITY & VOLUNTARY SECTOR

Strong communities, iwi and hapū have the ability to take up opportunities for economic development and to achieve well-being for community members. Strong communities, iwi and hapū are also better able to deal with their problems without government help.

The Department works alongside communities in two ways:

- as the major government funder of community groups

- supporting community groups through its network of community advisors.

The success of these two strategies is underpinned by co-operation between government agencies working with communities, iwi and hapū. This co-operation is aimed at overcoming problems faced by communities as they interact with government. There is further opportunity for co-operation between government, the business sector and community organisations.

3. MINISTER'S ROLE: COMMUNITY & VOLUNTARY SECTOR

The Ministerial role is to be a focal point for the government's interventions and strategies at the community level. It is also to lead the government's relationship with the community and voluntary sector.

There are strong linkages in this work with the role of the Minister of Local Government, given the potential for local government to be more involved in community planning and the identification of community outcomes, and with the Minister of Māori Affairs.

The Minister is also seen by many people working in the sector as the appropriate person to whom to express concerns about their resourcing needs, ongoing viability and frustration with government systems.

4. DEPARTMENT'S ROLE: COMMUNITY & VOLUNTARY SECTOR

The Department is responsible for:

- Policy Advice - providing policy advice for community development

5. KEY ISSUES/THEMES FOR NEXT THREE YEARS: COMMUNITY & VOLUNTARY

SECTOR

- Championing the community. Having one champion Minister for community will ensure that there is a single point of leadership and accountability across the government's community strategies and initiatives
- Increasing the number and investing in the development of the capacity of government's community development advisors to work as "brokers" between communities and government and other parties (such as local government and businesses)
- Amalgamating key government funding and programmes and, where appropriate, aligning other schemes by developing common application processes (such as applying the COGS on-line process to other funding schemes)
- Improving the ability of government to respond to communities by increasing the use of multi-year funding agreements, allowing greater flexibility around funding so agencies can respond to communities, and reducing the output focus of programmes by moving to a focus on government and community outcomes
- Supporting Māori self-determined development. Māori seek to determine their own outcomes for their communities, iwi and hapū, and to be actively involved in the delivery of services for Māori. Increased investment in community advisory services would also support this goal
- Supporting Pacific peoples to achieve economic development for their communities through exploring opportunities in new and innovative industries. Community development services will be a key factor in the economic development of Pacific communities
- Ensuring effectiveness for ethnic communities. Community development services need to be sensitive and responsive to the needs of emerging and well-established ethnic communities. Responding to the needs of increasingly diverse New Zealand communities will require an increased investment from government
- Evaluating Community Outcomes. Mechanisms to evaluate the impact of community development services and funding schemes on community outcomes need to be developed. This will allow a better assessment of the "return" on government's investment in working with communities.
